

The School of Psychology at the University of Wales, Bangor, UK

The School of Psychology at the University of Wales, Bangor, UK, seeks to make appointments at the level of Lecturer, Senior Lecturer or Chair in the areas of Child Development, Language, Dyslexia/Literacy Development, Language Disorders, and/or the Neuroscience of Language. The successful candidate will have obtained a Ph. D. and will have a proven track record of research output. Applicants will teach in the area of Language or Development and will be expected to maintain an active research programme, including external grant support. For candidates with expertise and a proven track record in Dyslexia/Literacy Development or in Language Disorders, there is the possibility of consideration for the Directorship of the Dyslexia Unit, which has both a research and an applied mission.

In the area of Cognitive Neuroscience the School has a strong research group of approximately 20 faculty - including researchers working in language and language development as well as in perception, attention, memory, object recognition, emotion, ageing, consumer choice, clinical neuroscience, and the control of action; it is now seeking to further strengthen the areas of language and development. Researchers in the School use multiple and varied approaches to the study of cognitive neuroscience including experimental and observational studies of behaviour, patient populations, ERP, TMS, and fMRI. The School enjoys the highest research rating that can be obtained in the UK (RAE 5*) as well as the highest teaching rating ("Excellent"). The Centre for Cognitive Neuroscience is located within a modern purpose-built facility, The Brigantia Building, which will soon provide accommodation for a 3T magnet. The University of Wales, Bangor is located in rural North Wales between the sea and the mountains and offers a range of outdoor activities.
